level, region-level, and image-level tasks. Compared to the networks designed purely for the image classification task, our network as a backbone is more effective for pixel-level and region-level tasks. Second, it enables the gradient from the very deep layer to be directly propagated to shallow layers, called direct BP in this paper.

You can't make A Level predictions on the basis of your GCSEs. They test different things and you can do brilliantly at your GCSEs and awfully at A Level (and vice versa). To be honest, you should know what kind of a student you are, so it shouldn't be too difficult to make rough projections of what kind of grades you think you're capable of.
