So I've read through the guide, and went back and took a closer look at Words of Power. My initial impression of the system was that it had a lot of potential, but suffered the same lack of support for new options that 3.5 was notorious for; I doubt Words of Power will see much of any additional content.

I got really intrigued by the idea of Words of Power, so I've been playing a Wordcasting Sorcerer for a few months now. It was really cool at first, but now I'm at level 13 and starting to notice some things that seem broken. The Effect Word Combinations table leaves a lot to be desired. There are some combinations it doesn't spell out very well.

Is Paizo ever going to fix Words of Power? : Pathfinder_RPG

Or a cloak of dreams style word to make a sleep wall -- you know, neat combinations like that. Ultimately due to the limitations of words themselves, either by having to construct spells ahead of time via prep or spontaneously (limited combos) You kind of have to come at words of power with a theme of casting in mind.

There's a Runestone of Power that does what I suspect you're trying to do. It's from the Pathfinder Society Field Guide, I think. It's also more expensive, but is guaranteed to work. Twice as much, yeah. Wizards get off easy. The Runestone is also doing more than twice as much. The Pearl only recharges the specific spell you've just used up.

Re: Pathfinder Words of power. You know, it occurs to me that using the WoP, you can create a truly free-form magic system within d&d. If you are a sorcerer, or any other spontaneous spellcaster, using this system and the spell-point system together, you would have a very flexible and awesomely non-Vancian system of spellcasting.
