I have started experiencing an engine overheating problem. After driving for about 5 mins, the temperature shot to 250 and the 'stop engine' light and alarm came on. From that time onwards I had to start and stop many times until I reached home as the 'stop' and 'check coolant' alarms kept coming soon after I started.

I got an overheating 1.8turbo engine on a passat 2003. For the third time. I added some coolant since some leaked out the small (expansion?) tank. On the last overheating I stopped the car and open hood to see what was happening. The coolant was hot enough that it started to boil and leak from the tank. The fan was turning fine.

I've read there was a recall for the transmission heat sensor on 2008-2009 and some 2010s and perhaps that overheating warning is there to cover the issue further. It's reassuring to know you haven't had any problems. I'm curious to know if your 2010 owners manual mentions the overheating notice I quoted out of mine.
