Consumption of phosphoric acid for its acid properties is relatively small (e.g., treatment of metal surfaces, beverage acidulation). Phosphoric acid is the leading intermediate product or processing step between phosphate rock and the end markets for phosphorus in phosphate form. The supply/demand balance for phosphoric acid is supply driven.

The Furnace Acid Process (FAP) uses carbon to reduce phosphorous to elemental phosphorous (P 2); the carbon oxidizes to carbon monoxide (CO) and calcium silicate ( $\text{CaSiO}_2$ ) is formed. The elemental phosphorus is subsequently oxidized, to phosphorus gas and is then absorbed in water to produce phosphoric acid ( $\text{H}_3\text{PO}_4$ ).

Polypropylene is currently one of the fastest growing polymers. Much of this growth is attributed to polypropylene's ability to displace conventional materials (wood, glass, metal) and other thermoplastics at lower cost. Polypropylene (PP) is a tough, rigid plastic and produced in a variety of molecular weights and crystallinities.
