My V-Drums were in storage for 3 years, packed by movers in cardboard boxes, with some item pushing hard against the the center of one of the PD-125s the entire time. When unpacked, the head had an obvious wrinkle and it played for crap. I bought a new head (US$40 in Tokyo) and put that on, and results a

I'll make it short: it's excellent hardware Roland. Detection of rims is exemplary. One flaw: the "hotspot" in the center. The sensor detects the exact center of the skin, and there is a difference in sensitivity between the center and 1 cm below. This is annoying when playing nuances (for me at the ...

Roland PD-125 Pad I own a TD-12 KX kit and I wanted to upgrade 2 of my 10" pads to 2 12" pads and they work great. I was a little worried that it might not be compatible with my old TD-12 KX, but my Sweetwater rep assured me that it would work fine, and it did! I love it and also all of the great support I receive from the Sweetwater crew.

The PD-125X from Roland is an electronic drum that's been designed to be used with TD series sound modules. Both the mesh head and the rim have separate sensors. When used with the TD-9, TD-12, or the TD-20 sound module, both sensors can fire simultaneously for a more accurate representation of the interaction between the head, rim, and the strike of your sticks.

IMO the basket that makes the PD-125 ideal for the high end Roland modules is not the best design for the 2Box module. Whenever you hit the rim on the PD-125 you are causing quite a bit of vibration to the head piezo/cone because the basket hangs over the drum edge and the head piezo platform is in the same basket.
