In ecology, a biological interaction is the effect that a pair of organisms living together in a community have on each other. They can be either of the same species (intraspecific interactions), or of different species (interspecific interactions). These effects may be short-term, like pollination and predation, or long-term; both often strongly influence the evolution of the species involved.

Evolution is change in the heritable characteristics of biological populations over successive generations. These characteristics are the expressions of genes that are passed on from parent to offspring during reproduction. Different characteristics tend to exist within any given population as a result of mutation, genetic recombination and other sources of genetic variation.

This mission addresses not just a lack of widely available Arabic texts on the web, but the condition of much of the material digitized, as "many older Arabic books are out-of-print, in fragile condition, and are otherwise rare materials that are in danger of being lost.". Though clearly an ever more valuable resource for students of Arabic, ACO has much more to offer those already acquainted ...
